[Vol. XV.]

LEXINGTON:—PRINTED BY JOHN BRADFORD, (On Main Street)—PRICE TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAID IN ADVANCE.

Guardian of Freedom.

ARRANGEMENTS ARE NOW MAKING, BY JOHN BRADFORD & SON, FOR re-commencing the publication (in Frankfort) of the GUARDIAN OF FREEDOM, Which has been for some time Suspended.

This paper will be published once a week, (to commence on Friday the 2d day of October next) executed with an entire New Type, (of which this is a specimen) and on the same sized paper as that on which it was formerly printed, and will contain as much matter as any other News-Paper published at present in the State.

The Price of the GUARDIAN OF FREEDOM will be as follows:—Two DOLLARS Per Annum, payable in the following articles of good Merchantable Produce, (to be delivered at the Office in Frankfort) viz:—Wheat, Rye, Barley, Oats, Corn, Brandy, Whiskey, Cider, Currants, Linseed, Sals, Sugar, Flour, Hemp, Bees-Wax, Tallow, Bacon and Butter, at the Frankfort market prices; or ONE DOLLAR and FIFTY CENTS, in Cash; the payment to be made at the time of subscribing; or Two DOLLARS Cash, payable at the expiration of the year, for which notes of hand will be required, at the time of subscribing. No subscription will be taken for a less term than one year.

An extensive correspondence with Printers in every State in the Union, will enable the Editors to give every interesting article of intelligence a place, as early as can be done in any other paper in Kentucky; and from the low price of their paper, expect it will have a more extensive circulation. The price of Advertisements will be Fifty Cents for the first insertion, and Twenty-Five for every continuance, if the length does not exceed the breadth, and longer ones in that proportion.

It sometimes happens that well grounded complaints are made against a News-Paper, when an over proportion of its columns are occupied with advertisements; to prevent such complaints, the Editors of the GUARDIAN OF FREEDOM pledge themselves to their subscribers, that not more than two pages of that paper shall ever be occupied with advertisements at the same time. And in order to serve advertising customers, if more present themselves, a Supplement shall be added.

Subscriptions received by the Editors, at the Office of the Kentucky Gazette, and by the Post-Masters throughout the State.

SEPTEMBER 11th, 1801.

England.

LONDON, June 22.

PROBABILITIES OF PEACE.

The present moment certainly presents very flattering hopes of a speedy reconciliation between France and Great Britain. It is evident that Buonaparte, contrary to the peculiarity of his character, has for some time used a tone of moderation when speaking of the English, which indicates a wish to close hostilities between the two countries. The language of the Moniteur, the official paper of the first consul, has lately exhibited a disposition of the most pacific nature. The professions of Mr. Addington in favor of peace—the renewed interviews between Lord Hawkebury and Mr. Otto—the frequent communications on the part of the latter with the cabinet of the Tuilleries—the distinguished and amicable reception of Lord St. Helens at Peterburg—the fortunate adjustment of the differences with the powers of the Baltic—all promise the speedy accomplishment of this great and desirable object. When contemplating, therefore a reconciliation of differences between two great rival nations, after nine years obdurate and sanguinary war—a war of giants, when compared with any of those which preceded it—the mind of man, waried by the exhibition of so many disastrous and bloody scenes, dwells with delight on the consolatory idea of returning peace and unclouded days.

But how much the illusion of that idea is lost when we quit this general view in order to examine the different obstacles that will occur in the negotiations to frustrate the laudable intentions of our ministry! It is at the very moment when France proclaims its moderation, the only basis of a suitable peace, that its ambitious projects are more and more developed. After having declared in 1792, that it wished not to make conquests, and that it only fought for liberty, we saw it soon afterwards invade all the countries situated to the west between its ancient frontiers and the Rhine, and to the east and south as far as the Alps. After having thus declared that it required no other limits but those which that river and the mountains had fixed for France, we see the confular republic seeking to enrich itself at the expence of Switzerland, and demanding of the latter a cession of the important country of Valais, in order that it might be united with Piedmont, finally designed to be incorporated with the mother republic. Thus, by establishing itself beyond the two great chains of the Alps, it will be enabled to rule with despotic sway over the rest of Italy, and subject that important country to its empire.

If we may believe the reports in circulation, Spain is to pay for the establishment of the duke of Parma in Tuscany, and is intended union with Portugal, by ceding the provinces of Catalonia and Sicily to France, and thus give the latter the flame influence in Spain which it possesses in Italy, by the acquisition of Piedmont. Who can therefore calculate on the immeasurable extent of the confular ambition? Or what conquests will suffice to gratify its devouring avidity?

But sufficient attention seems not to have been paid to the seeds of eternal war the elements of political dissension, which the first consul has spread over the whole surface of the continent. The imagination is lost in contemplating the ravages which the system of the indemnities will produce in Germany; and the petty feuds inflamed, perhaps by Prussia and Russia may be the means of a new contest, equally fierce and bloody as the last. It is well known that the king of Prussia views with jealousy and alarm these transactions, and that in ratifying the treaty of Berlin he has reserved to himself the personal influence and intermediate interference in the execution of the partitions.

If we turn our attention to the east it offers to us similar results. The interests of the new French government, as well as of the old, are essentially linked with the preservation of the Turkish empire in Europe. It is through the apathy of that government that France has been able to maintain a preponderance in the Archipelago and the Levant. The wish of exciting against us an enemy in the empire of Russia, has induced the first consul to propose to him the execution of the old project of Catharine II. for the invasion of European Turkey; but that proposition always opposed, or eluded by the ancient French government, is only employed by the present as a Machiavelian trick. It must perceive that the Russians when matters of that interfering country would carry on a trade themselves and rule in the Mediterranean. By the secret articles of the treaty of Luneville, the emperor of Germany, it is said, is to be partner in the division of European Turkey, to recompense him for the sacrifices he has already made to France. Soon or later, we may perhaps see the two emperors engaged in a fierce conflict for this bone of contention; and while they are fighting to decide who shall have the greater share, it is then that the confular government, recovered from the shocks of the revolution, will seek to profit by their division and their weakness, to assert that ascendancy which France has always expected in the Mediterranean. Such is the first view in which the pacific system of Buonaparte presents itself—a system organizing perpetual wars—a system conceived for revolutionizing all Europe—if some exterminating power should not arrest the hero, or some benignant genius dissipate these destructive elements.

WESEL, June 6.

The army of observation continues to occupy its former positions, and nothing has yet taken place that indicates the evacuation of the electorate of Hanover. It is even stated with confidence, that after the grand review of Magdebourg, some more regiments will arrive on the banks of the Weser. Magazines of provisions are certainly collecting in this quarter.

OBSERVATIONS

ON THE LATE EVENTS AT

St. DOMINGO.

The transactions, which have lately taken place in the island of St. Domingo, are of a nature much more serious and interesting than they appear to have been considered by those papers in which the subject has been touched. To the principle of independence, where there is a competency of means and civilization to enforce order and policy, there can be no possible objection; it is the right of every nation, however small, to will its own independence and the form of its government; but we are among those who deny the competency and question the legality of the authorities assumed by the extravagant organization which has lately been set up in St. Domingo.

Neither can we give all credit that has been given to Toussaint Louverture for the supposed capacity of his mind. In the new system of what is called a constitution, we see nothing to excite abhorrence and disgust. In truth it is but a parody on the present unprincipled government of France; despotism, contrived with so much ingenuity as to afford every facility to the concentration of power and no check on usurpation or protection of the rights of the people.—This is now, as it ever has been, our opinion of the constitution formed by Buonaparte, to whose talents we are ready to subscribe, and in whose disposition we shall be willing to trust until a peace shall tell his choice between a glorious name and the freedom of his country, or the admiration mixed with the execration of mankind.

The constitution of St. Domingo is in truth but a spurious mimicry of the constitution of the 8th Brumaire, wherein every thing that is plausibly good is rejected and every thing that is practically bad is made worse. Buonaparte avoided the odious form of an individual despotism by making the executive a nominal triumvirate; Toussaint throws aside even this sacrifice to popular sentiment. Buonaparte makes his power durable for ten years, the black confers for life! Buonaparte institutes a council of state of twenty or thirty members with particular functions, Touissant inditutes a council of six.

Through the whole of this new made mould, no man who regards human rights or free government can discover any thing to admire. It is a despotism of the worst kind, formed in the worst manner, conceived in treachery and masked by hypocrisy; which, however, the circumstances of a singular date of things may procure obedience under it, cannot be productive of social security, permanent peace, external or internal confidence. It may indeed concentrate the force, ignorance, and superstition, in the great body of the unfortunate and injured defendants of Africa, and expatriate them for mischief—and it may spread one day the blast of retarding destruction upon the heads of the whites, who may be as the mulattoes already have been in that island, extirpated; and if we could calculate upon the duration of such power, see to the countries in its neighborhood.

Considering it in another view—the allegiance which this self appointed d. c. professes towards France. No man can read it, but will perceive this constitution to have been formed by some enemy to the French revolution. It is a bitter and malignant satire on free government, and on the French or Ralsh, or even of a tributary Mogul or Stadtholder we can readily conceive, because the examples are familiar to our daily knowledge, but that of an hereditary free citizen, or of an hereditary chief, owing allegiance to a chief not hereditary, or to a nation where popular right is at least professedly maintained, is an absurdity so monstrous that we are really astonished to find any epithet, but that of abhorrence, bestowed upon the transaction.

But it will be said, either that the blacks are too ignorant, or that a despotism was necessary for their situation.—Such are the excuses already made for innovation on the rights of the people, such are the arguments of all usurpers. And it would be vain to shew the absurdity by the example of Paraguay, or by the notorious fact that despotism never favors virtue, nor promotes the emancipation of the mind from ignorance.—Touissant may have all the cunning which supplies frequently the want of more generous talents, but it is clear that he has been the tool of others, and the dupe even of his own cupidity. That he may feel a justifiable desire for the emancipation of his race is allowed, it is believed to be not only a passion with him, but to be a powerful agent of his ambition. But we will not say all that suggests itself to us upon this topic.—The southern states it is an occurrence that demands their particular and constant reflection. It ought to suggest to the union the necessity of providing every possible means of security—they ought to consider whether it would not be advisable to call upon congress to open by every means the channels of population, to hold out invitation to emigrants from the nations of Europe, and to render the inducement greater to actual settlers in the states south of the Potomac—the individual states should make the period of local naturalization to actual settlers proportionably short, as they should settle further south, as for example, in Virginia the settler might be vested with all the rights of a citizen, as it regards the state, in three years, in North Carolina two years, in South Carolina 18 months, and Georgia one year; and so on corresponding to the latitude of places in the western states.

The southern states cannot turn their attention too early or earnestly to their internal situation—and congress cannot act with too much care—for the whole of the union, even those who may not be so immediately concerned, are as seriously though collaterally involved in the effects apprehended. It is a subject of the most delicate nature—and more care and should be thought and done upon it than ought to be published.

The federal constitution, requiring that the naturalization laws should be uniform, would appear to interfere with what we have suggested concerning a graduated scale in the southern states. We think it proper to repeat, that we mean such a gradation to be confined to the local or state rights; for example, the choice of state magistrates and legislators, and not the votes for members of the federal government that we make no doubt that the people are now convinced that the naturalization law, now in existence, and which was created for party purposes, ought to be repealed, and a more liberal law instituted.

BOSTON, August 2. ARMED NEUTRALITY

There are many who are enough to believe, on the authority of a few paragraphs in the English newspapers, which are copied with a much folio-like as if they were really entitled to credit, that the armed neutrality in the north of Europe is no longer to be considered as having a political existence. They view a solemn defensive covenant among some of the oldest and most respectable nations as a measure to be revoked with as much facility as a law would be repealed in a court of justice. They forget what happened in the American war, when this compact was first invented by Dr. Franklin. At that time the British government was compelled, on the 21st of April, 1781, to issue orders and instructions "charging and enjoining the commanders of all ships of war and the commanders of all vessels having letters of marque and reprisal, not to stop or detain any ships or vessels in the Baltic for the purpose of making prizes of them." These orders were one consequence of the armed neutrality at that period. But the Russians, Danes, and Swedes, under the auspices of Catharine, supported by the king of Prussia, had still farther advantages secured to them; and the sea was free from all vexatious interruptions during the war, till the peace of 1783 put a period to its deviations; by the final triumph of the allied powers, and the complete establishment of our national independence.

It must be obvious that the British at this moment, struggling as they are with innumerable difficulties, must assume the best countenance their affairs will admit. On the other side, it is scarcely conceivable that a project so useful to neutral commerce will be rescinded at the mouth of the first gun that has been fired at Copenhagen. Such changes do not so easily happen. It is more likely that the Northern Powers wanted time and opportunity to prepare and display their strength. The British were fuddled upon them. A little policy might prevent injury. A few general expressions on the part of Alexander would not signify much; and as the British mean soon to leave the Baltic it seems as if a great object of the confederacy was already secured.

As to this treaty of defence being neutralized by trade modifications, such an hypothesis is hardly admissible. It is conceived that the death of the emperor Paul and the release of the English vessels lead to this consequence. But the detection of the British in Russia was on a very different account. The Swedes and Danes were never responsible for that act; that was Paul's affair, solely and exclusively, even according to the British papers. Alexander does not appear to have promised to acquiesce in any other than an honorable settlement. His navy is growing fast. It would be degrading with his government, in the eyes even of the federal friends of England and a limited trade, if he was meanly to submit without a single effort.

There are some so completely English, that they seem to forget they are citizens of an independent country, that has rights and interests of its own. They forget that president Washington's proclamation contended for the modern law, though it was sufficiently accommodating in every other particular. It is true, our ambassador at Berlin, we hear, was three months persuading the Prussians to infer the ancient law, and to yield the right of search, in our late Prussian treaty. Mr. Adams's friends may one day be called upon to explain this circumstance. In the first treaty with Prussia the provisions were very different. It is to be hoped that the modern law will be maintained, and that the papers respecting the negotiation at the court of Berlin will be laid before the public.

August 10.

TRIAL of FAIRBANKS.

The grand jury consisting of twenty very respectable men, by an unanimous voice returned a bill of indictment against Faust Fairbanks, of Dedham, for the willful murder of Elizabeth Fales.

The indictment charged the prisoner that he, on the 18th day of May, 1801, wilfully, maliciously, and of his malice aforethought, with a knife, made an assault on the deceased, and murdered her.

On this indictment he was arraigned on Wednesday, and by his own consent Thursday was assigned for his trial. On Thursday morning, at eight o'clock, he was brought into court, and being informed of his right to challenge, he challenged a number of the jury, and then his trial proceeded. He was assisted by Mr. Otis and Mr. Lowell, as his counsel, appointed by the court at his request.

The attorney general opened the trial by stating the facts generally, which he expected would appear in evidence. He explained the nature of positive and presumptive evidence, and informed the court and jury that the trial would contain much of the latter—that he should not make use of any confessions, made by the prisoner after the murder was committed.

The government counsel examined between thirty and forty witnesses. By the testimony of these a great variety of circumstances were proved, from whence the following facts were made to appear:

That the prisoner is about twenty-one years of age, the deceased was eighteen. That he was much of an invalid, debilitated in his right arm, and had lived an idle life. That he had a kind of fondness for the deceased, and that she paid much more attention to him than to any other young man; but he was not allowed to visit her father's house, which was more than one mile from that of his own father. They had been in the habit of meeting frequently in company with others, walking together and separating themselves in the walks from other people. The prisoner had used revengeful threatenings against her family, probably because he was not allowed to visit her. On Saturday the 16th of May, he told two of his friends that he should meet her in the pasture on Monday, and endeavor to induce her to go off with him, and marry him, and that if she refused to do so he would attempt her chastity. She was healthy and cheerful—walked to meeting, nearly two miles on the 17th; being in the practice of singing at public worship, she joined the choirers and sang freely. On Monday morning she began with the family business, and with her mother, sister, &c. went through the usual business of washing, in the forenoon. Being engaged to go out on a visit with her sister and others in the afternoon she dined early, on milk, which she frequently used for her dinner. She had been remarkably gay all the morning.

She went at half past twelve to Mrs. Guild's who lived about eighty rods southwesterly from her father's. Her business there was to receive a book he had lent, but the family having not done with it, she did not bring it away. She carried there until nearly two o'clock, gay and cheerful; when she came out she stopped at the door ten minutes or more, sporting with a child of three or four years old. No notice was taken which way she walked, but she left the house singing as she went. A few minutes past three o'clock she was found in a lot called Mason's pasture, by her father and kinsman, eighty rods from her father's house and about the same distance from Mrs. Guild's. The lines from her father to Guild's, to the place where she was found, and from thence to her father's, form a triangle of nearly equal sides.

When her father came to her, she was alive. Her throat was cut into the wind-pipe, and nearly to the back part of it. She had a wound, made with a small knife, by a stab, in her back between her shoulder blades, beside the back bone and not far below the neck; one stab in her side, six deep wounds in her left arm, some of which severed the tendons, two slight wounds in her right arm, and one deep one in her left thumb, which severed the ball from the bone. When her father came to her he laid with her face on a stone, breathed through the wound in her throat and expired within a few minutes.

To fix the murder on the defendant it was proved that he had informed two persons of his expiring to meet her there for the purposes above mentioned, and that he had about two o'clock proceeded to that place; that two young women heard her screams of distress for ten or fifteen minutes, about 3 o'clock; and knew her voice and mentioned to each other that she was in distress; the wind blew fresh from where she was to them, the distance being about Seventy rods.

Her mother became anxious for her return, looked out a few minutes after three, and the prisoner went with blood, holding a bloody knife in his hand, was seen by her coming to the door. The alarm being given, her father went to the place where the body was, on the prisoner's saying where she lay and that she was dead. He had a wound in his thigh which did not injure his wind-pipe, several in his body, and one in his thigh made with the knife, but none of them deep, except one in his belly: he has recovered of these some time ago.

The knife he had in his hand he borrowed that morning, as he said to mend a pen: it was small, and rather dull. By the side of her body his great coat, which three witnesses swore he went out with after one o'clock, and his pocket book were found. No knife or instrument was found near her body, and her mother and sister swore that she carried none with her. Her shawl and shoes were off, and a paper, purporting to be a certificate of his having been duly published to her, torn in pieces and bloody, was found near her. It appeared in evidence, that this paper was made by a young woman, a niece of his, the day before, very innocently on her part; nor did it appear that he had any intentions to use it in this way, when he requested to have it made, and her name was put in voluntarily by the young woman; but after he took it in his hand he said, "Ab Bessy Fales, that will do."

The points made by the Attorney General on this evidence were: that she was killed with that knife; that the prisoner was present when she was killed; that no other person was present with them; that he must have killed her, unless he had destroyed her own life.

His counsel defended him on the supposition, that he and she were fond of each other; that they were both afflicted with adverse circumstances, and agreed severally to kill themselves; that he lent her the knife for the purpose, but that when she had effectually used it, he was not so successful as she was.

To maintain this position, they attempted to enquire of witnesses, whether he did not tell this tale to her mother, when he came to her, covered with blood.

The Attorney general objected to evidence of his declarations in his own favor, because as he had not used them against him they ought not to be used for him, relying that declarations made by criminals in their own favor were never used for, unless they were against them. The court did not allow his declarations to be used. Had they been used her mother would no doubt, have sworn, that he told her Bessy was dead in the pasture, that he had killed herself with that knife, and that he had tried to kill himself—but advised her father not to go, because he could not relieve her, for she was in fact dead; that when her kinsman went towards the place he called to him to bring his pocket book, which he had left by the deceased; but this was not in evidence on that trial, but had been before the grand jury.

The counsel for the defendant introduced witnesses, principally to establish the fact of a fondness between them; and for full six hours defended him in a strain of eloquence which is not frequently equalled in any country.

The Attorney-General in closing the trial, insisted that the evidence proved his intention to violate her chastity, at that time and place, by force, unless he would agree to go off with him to be married on that false certificate; that he in resentment had torn that paper, and that he attempted to possess her, but, finding his strength not equal to the attempt, drew his knife and cut her arms, while they were held in defence of her throat; that the wound given in her back directly in, could not have been made by her own hand; that if he cut her throat first, she could not give the other wounds, nor could he give that, if the others were first made. That as the prisoner by his own position must have lent the knife, and have seen her lacerate and wound herself, no presumptions remained in his favor. That even, on his own position, he had a heart void of social duty, and fatally bent on mischief—the genuine malice aforethought.

The judges were accurate and minute in summing up the evidence to the jury.

The jury went out on Friday evening after ten o'clock. And returned their verdict next morning, that the prisoner was GUILTY!!

The Court on Saturday passed sentence of death upon him: in which the Chief Justice addressed him in terms foreboding the heinousness of his crime before him, and exhorting him to repentance;—but he remained as he always has done, obstinately inflexible—the only person in the whole assembly who was not affected at the solemnity of the scene.

The judgment of the Court and the final verdict of the jury, have received universal approbation.

OF ### TOUSSANT LOUVERTURE.

(Concluded from our last.)

Touissant hearing of his mother, sent a message to general Mailand, saying he had a favor to ask. "What was it?" To send his matter to him. The general did so; and Touissant relieved his matter to his estates, and gave him negroes for their cultivation. He behaved in the most affectionate and kind manner to him who had truly been his father.

General Maitland, upon this, sent a message, asking a favor of Touissant. What is it? To restore a dozen of the principal planters to their estates. Touissant desired they might be sent to his care. They were so. He clapped them in prison.

Some days afterwards, he had them brought into a church, before a large body of his fellow blacks; and he mounted the pulpit to preach a sermon; for his prowess in arms is but a small part of his distinction. Here he enforced the virtue of forgiveness to the repentant saying: "We were for a while Spaniards, (the blacks fled to the Spanish protection, in the beginning of the troubles), but we were misled. We were born Frenchmen, and now we are Frenchmen again. These twelve men have all been misled. They were born Frenchmen. For a time they have been British; but now they returned and are Frenchmen again. Let us embrace." Here Touissant embraced them, and reconciled his followers—He restored them to their estates, and gave them negroes as servants.

It would be the disposition of a little mind, in Touissant's situation, to hate and persecute the whites; but he knows well that the island cannot flourish without them; that they are necessary to cultivation and good government, to the commerce and prosperity of the place. Therefore his chief aim is to restore the planters, and revive the trade. He fears that France will one day endeavor to punish him as a rebel; but this France will never be able to accomplish. He would like the French commissary is a fool & person of no influence: Touissant disregards him; but all Touissant's acts are in the name of the French republic, for which alone he pretends to act; his utmost wish is that the Directory would name him their general. Touissant is anxious to find a market for the produce of the island; and there is an understanding, as if a treaty had been concluded. Col. Grant is appointed our agent in St. Domingo. His ostensible business is to settle some points about the evacuation of the island; but his real business is to establish a trade by which the whole produce of St. Domingo will be brought to Jamaica. #### BY YESTERDAY'S MAIL.

GLASGOW, July 25.

From the London Gazette Extraordinary.

Downing-street, July 21.

A dispatch of which the following is a copy has been this day received at the office of the right hon. lord Hobart one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state, from lieutenant general the hon. Sir John Hely Hutchinson, K. B. commanding his majesty's forces in Egypt.

Head Quarters camp near Alkum, June 1.

My Lord,

I have the honour to inform your lordship that the French had abandoned the position of El Ait, on the 7th May, which we occupied the same evening, and on the 9th, we were advanced to Rhamanie, where the French were posted with upwards of three thousand infantry and eight thousand cavalry. We at first imagined that they might have endeavored to have maintained that position, but our corps on the eastern bank of the Nile having got into their rear, took the fort of Rhamanie in reverse, which probably induced the enemy to retire in the night between the 9th and 10th leaving a garrison in the fort, which surrendered in the morning, amounting to 110 men, commanded by a chef de brigade; we also took the same day about fifty cavalry and three officers coming from Alexandria. As the enemy retired towards Cairo, it became necessary to follow them, in order to cover the army of the Grand Vizier, and to secure a junction with the expected reinforcements from India.

Nothing happened of any importance until the 14th, when we fell in with a valuable convoy of galleys on the Nile. They had come from Cairo down to the canal of Menoufi, which joins the Damietta and Rosetta branches of the river. From this circumstance they knew nothing of the retreat of gen. La Grange from Rhamanie. About a hundred and fifty prisoners fell into our hands and several heavy guns of them intended for the defence of Alexandria. The convoy itself was very valuable and is a great loss to the enemy. We found on board all kinds of clothing, wine, spirits, &c. and about five thousand pounds in money. On the 17th, which we were informed by the Arabs that a considerable body of French coming from Alexandria, were advancing towards the Nile, near the spot where the boats of the captain Pacha were. The cavalry were immediately ordered out, with two pieces of cannon under the command of brigadier general Doyle, supported by his brigade of infantry, colonel Cavalier, who commanded the French convoy, as soon as he perceived the boats of the captain Pacha, suspected that our army must be near, and therefore retired into the desert, where we followed him. The cavalry came up with him, after a march of about three hours. A flag of truce was sent to them by major Wilson of the Horse, requiring them to surrender, on condition that their private property should be respected, and that they should be sent to France by the first convenient opportunity. With these terms they complied, and laid down their arms. They amounted in all, to about 600 men, cavalry and artillery, together with a considerable portion of the dromedary corps one four pounder, and 550 camels. The prisoners are all Frenchmen, and of the best troops they have in Egypt.

On the 17th of May, the enemy retired from the fort of Libiet, on the Damietta Branch, and formed a junction with about two hundred men which they had at Burles, this fort they also evacuated and embarked in five small vessels, four of which have been taken and carried into Aboukir bay; the fifth endeavored to escape towards Cyprus, but a Turkish frigate was left in chase of her; so that it is more than probable she has shared the same fate. The garrisons of the two forts consisted of about seven hundred men; so that in all we have taken from the 9th till the 20th, near sixteen hundred men, which makes a considerable diminution of the enemy's force in this country.

The French made a most extraordinary rapid march from Rhamanie to Giza, where they arrived on the 13th, and crossed the river Boulaq.

On the 15th they marched to attack the Grand Vizier's army. His highness anticipated their intention, and made a forward movement with a considerable body of cavalry on the night between the 15th and 16th. The armies remained for some hours in the presence of each other, when the Ottoman troops attacked at about 8 o'clock in the morning, and after an action of 7 hours the French retired, having lost between 3 and 400 men killed and wounded. They were nearly the same people who had retreated from Rhamanie, & were about 4 or 4500 men.

I congratulate your Lordship upon the event of this very important action; I have also much pleasure in informing you, that the Mamelukes, under the orders of Osman Bey (successor of Murad Bey) to the amount of about 1500 cavalry, inferior or certainly to none in the world. I am sanguine enough to hope that the most vigorous good effect, will arise from this junction, as they have a most intimate knowledge of the country, and the greatest influence among the inhabitants.

I enclose you the capitulation of the fort of Rhamanie, and also a return of the killed and wounded on the 9th May, which I rejoice has been so very inconsiderable.

(Signed)

J. H. HUTCHINSON.

To the Rt. Hon. Lord Hobart.

PARIS, July 18.

We have already announced the arrival of admiral Gantheaume at Derna, a city of Africa, in the kingdom of Barca. We are informed, by more detailed accounts that the number of troops that landed amounts to 8000 men, and that they had only a march of five days to Egypt.—Rear Admiral Gantheaume, after having passed the Straights of Messina, sailed towards the north, and directed his course towards the south, & arrived at the above mentioned place without having been met by either admiral Warren or Bickerton, whom Lord Keith had sent to look after the French squadron. This account was sent from Leghorn, by a courier to Gen. Money, at Genoa. The unanimity & concert which appeared in the dispositions of the several captains, and other circumstances, give great probability to this account—of which, however, we still wait for confirmation.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 4.

Extract of a letter from an officer on board the frigate Philadelphia, capt. Barron, dated off the rock of Gibraltar, July 17, to his friend in this city. "We arrived at Gibraltar on the 1st inst. in good health. We found there the Grand Bahaw's (Lord High Admiral's) ship of war and brig. We continued at Gibraltar only two days. Our commodore, (Dale) in the President and the Experiment, went up the Straights on a cruizer, the Essex, Capt. Bainbridge, took a fleet under convoy, and we are to cruise at the mouth of the Gut for the Tripolitan admiral, & should he dare to venture out, we shall surely take him.—On the 23rd June, off Cadiz, we were boarded by a British fleet of 6 sail; and on the 20th going up the Gut, we met 3 French line of battle ships. On the 5th July, the English squadron came up from Cadiz, and an engagement ensued, which lasted with desperate fighting on both sides, for four hours.—In the evening we were informed that the English had lost one ship, the Hannibal, and had gone into the Gut, while the French had put into Algeiras.

"On the 12th inst. at night, to windward, we discovered a great smok, and heard a violent explosion. It proceeded from a second engagement between the English, and French and Spaniards. We learnt that during the action two Spanish ships* of 112 guns each, blew up. After which the English engaged and pursued the remaining part of the fleet, which put into Cadiz. On the 15th going up the Gut we observed in every direction the floating remains of the wrecks &c."

[*These were doubtless the admiral Real Carlos and the S. Harmenigdo.—See extracts from the Gibraltar papers.]

Extract of another letter from an officer on board the Philadelphia, dated July 20, 1801.

"On the 13th another action took place, between the French, Spaniards & English. The Spaniards, when they discovered the English, got into confusion, and two 3 deckers got foul of each other—they cried out enemy! and began firing at one another. In short they took fire and both blew up. There were but 95 men saved from both ships out of 3000; the rest of the Spaniards run and left the French ships (3) to fight 5 English. The headmost of the English brought to the sternmost of the French. An English 74 was soon disabled. By that time two more of the English came up—the Frenchman struck—the other two got in to Cadiz. At one time the French admiral had 4 English 74's upon him and beat them off!"

"There are a number of Americans here. One of them challenged the Tripolitan Admiral out to fight him, but the latter would not accept the invitation.—He is afraid to leave Gibraltar."

2 PUBLIC NOTICE.

At a meeting of a number of citizens at Mr. Wallburn's tavern, the 10th day of September, A. C. it has been resolved, that the following sketch of a plan, for a final redemption of the negro slaves, should be inserted in the public papers: viz.

A Society to be formed, which raises a fund by charity or loan, the money lent to be repaid with interest at a certain time—Security given for it by the Society—Suitable slaves to be bought, to the extent of the fund—these to be hired out till the hire amounts to the purchase money and the interest—then to work one year for their education and another for the fund—then to be examined by the Society—if fit to be manumitted, but not lawfully, till by several years good behavior, they have showed themselves worthy of liberty. Slaves unfit for liberty, to work for the fund—the children, born in slavery, to be bound out, like white children, and to work two years for the fund, before manumission—negro-women, married to slaves not to be manumitted lawfully, and their children bound out for education at supra.

In this manner the fund will increase by the money bestowed, the interest of it, and the contribution of the negroes—no injury be done to any man's property—only such slaves, as are fit for liberty, manumitted—the number of free hirings in the state augmented—Slavery in time made unprofitable—and gradually extinguished.—

The generous, pious and patriotic citizens of Kentucky are hereby invited to attend on the second Thursday of October, which will be the 8th of the said month, at 12 o'clock, at Mr. Wallburn's tavern, on the road from Lexington to Bourbon, to consider, amend, or augment the above plan, which then will be laid before them at large.

ON SPRING,

In imitation of Horace.
DEFECTIONE MUSA, &c.

By WILLIAM LITTELL, ESQ.

The snow's length deſolv'd away
Before the ſun's prolific ray
The tender graſs appears:
The tree's their verdure reſume,
A verdant gay, a lively bloom,
The face of Nature wears
Tumultuous floods in peace ſubſide,
Decreating rivers ſmoothly glide,
Along their winding way
While ſtreaming virgins float and fair,
With graceful mien, and cheerful air,
Upon their margin play.
The year which flow'rs rolls away,
The hour which robs us of the day,
A mournful leſſon brings;
Silent they teach us to be wiſe,
And not to loſe the preſent day,
For everliſting things
The vernal winds diſſolve the froſt,
The ſpring is next in ſummer loſt,
Then ſummer in autumn's ſhades,
And autumn comes with ſunſet's gleam,
And in the cloſing circle meets
The cheerleſs winter days.
The waſting moon, and changing fun
The ſame old face diſſolve in
Through all preceding years:
Still vernal winds unbend the plains,
The genial warmth and ſummer rains
Waſt nature's toil repairs.
But when the ſpring of life is o'er,
The bloom of youth returns no more!
And ſummer's brighten ray
Contradiction darkens from that gloom
Which overſhadows the decaying tomb.
The cloſe of human day,
Who knows if heav'n's ſecret power
Will deign to add another hour
To life's uncertain ſum?
Who knows but that we may be made
But lifeleſs duſt, and empty ſhade,
Before the ſun's diſſolving beam?
Then reſt on happineſs to day,
Indulge in pleaſure while you may,
And what you have enjoy!
Whate'er with generous hand you uſe,
A greedy heir will ne'er abuſe,
Or wantonly deſtroy.

ANECDOTE.

One of the Dover ſtages, on its way to London, was ſtopped by a ſingle highwayman, but being informed by the coachman, there was no induſtrial paſſengers, and only one in the baſket, and he a failor, the robber indaſtrially proceeded to exerciſe his functions upon the honeſt tar: When waking him out of his ſleep, Jack demanded to know what he wanted? To which the ſon of plunder replied—“Your money.” “You ſhould have it,” ſays Jack. —“No, replied the robber, then I'll blow your brains out,” “—It your eyes, blow away,” ſays Jack, “I may as well be without brains as without money—Drive on coachboy.”
